FIRE APPARATUS RECEIVES TEST

Last Sunday the city board of trustees and Fire Chief H. Kneese were taken out in the new Seagrave fire apparatus on its test before being accepted.

The machine was tested on the grades on Miller avenue and the rough streets on Commercial. The machine showed everything that the specifications called for. A test was made on a run from the South City Garage to the intersection of the state and county highway at San Bruno, and the distance was made in less than four minutes.

THE MARCH OF PROGRESS

Not alone in the acquisition of industries is South San Francisco establishing her right to be recognized as a "City that hath foundations," but also in those solid betterments in the shape of street paving and improvements which are always found in communities of merit.

Commercial and Railroad avenues and the intersecting streets are to be paved at once, the contract having been let to the City Street Improvement Company. All the alleys in the business section will be paved as well, and now comes the announcement that Swift and Walker avenues, the main highways leading into the industrial section, are to be paved at once by the land company.

Last Tuesday evening at a meeting of the city board of trustees the plans for this work were approved by the city trustees and the contract was let to Ransome & Crumme. The work will be done under the supervision of George Kneese, city engineer. Nothing is more assuring to investors than this kind of evidence. It means permanency, it is positive proof of the earnestness and intent of all interests—citizens and promoters alike—to make of South San Francisco a real, live, permanent city; one where every investment is a good investment, is a safe investment, is a profitable investment.

Confidence is the word, and almost every day something transpires in this live community to make confidence put on her very best for public parade.

Morsman, Henry W. Yates, Judge James W. Savage, T. L. Kimball and George W. Holdredge. The remains were interred in Prospect Hill cemetery.—Omaha Bee, September 1, 1916.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

(By Charles A. Sands.)

The students of the local high school are contemplating giving another entertainment. A committee has been appointed to look up a play in which the students are to take part.

Athletics have been progressing very rapidly, and with the election of Byrne McSweeney as athletics manager, who is to succeed Marcus Dowd, who was a former student of the high school and has done much toward making the students interested in team work while he held the office of athletic manager. Under the supervision of Byrne McSweeney, however, the students are nearing perfection in many things that go to make an athletic team an invincible one, and it will not be long before the high school can boast of an athletic team that will be up to the standard and can compete with any of the other schools.

LOCAL FIRE TRUCK TAKES FIRST RUN

About 11 o'clock this morning a fire call was sent to this city from Lomita Park. The truck was driven by Fire Chief H. W. Kneese of this city.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE COUNTY BOARD OF SUPERVISORS

The board of supervisors met Monday morning and fixed the county tax rate for the fiscal year 1916. Despite the fact that the first payment on the principal of the $1,250,000 highway bond issue, amounting to $30,000, falls due this year, that $50,000 is needed to complete the roads on the coast-side, $60,000 for the construction of the new county jail, the board managed to keep the rate down to $2.22, which is one cent lower than last year. To do this required some careful and close figuring on the part of the board, Engineer James V. Neuman and County Auditor J. J. Shields and the latter's deputy, Ed Stack.

The situation was gone into thoroughly and studied from every angle so as to get the rate just as low as possible. The board succeeded in keeping the rate for the general fund down to 69 cents, as against 77 cents last year. The school fund is 1 cent lower than in 1915, the salary fund 2½ cents lower, and it was not found necessary to levy any tax for special road fund purposes.

The resolution fixing the tax rate adopted on motion of Supervisor MacBain, seconded by Supervisor Casey, was as follows:

Resolved, That by virtue of the authority vested in the board of supervisors by and under the provisions of section 3714, chapter V, article 2 of part 3 of the political code as amended:

It is hereby ordered that the rates of taxes levied by the board of supervisors of the county of San Mateo, state of California, for the fiscal year 1916 for state and county purposes upon each one hundred dollars of the assessed valuation of the property in the county of San Mateo, State of California, be and the same are hereby fixed and ordered collected as follows:

General (general purposes), (state interest)	.69
Highway interest	.29
School	.25
Salary	.076
Indigent	.40
Road regular	.00
Road special	.025
Court house bond and interest	.004
Court house furnishing, bond and interest	.38
County highway bond and interest	.03
County highway maintenance	.0275
High school maintenance (county)	.01
County free library tax	$2.22

In the general fund above the rate includes the following levies for special purposes:

Pescadero to Santa Cruz county line road	.075
San Gregorio to Pescadero road	.08
San Gregorio to La Honda	.025
Unapportioned fund, deficiency	.01
Advertising	.16

A PUBLIC NECESSITY.

It is high time the people of this city should give their serious consideration to the matter of securing a suitable site for a public park and an athletic field.

Without a public playground and park, South San Francisco will forever be a municipal cripple.

The longer this city puts off securing the land for this public necessity the harder will it be to secure it, and the greater will be its cost.

Some 400 acres of the 4000 acres of the holdings of the South San Francisco Land and Improvement Company's lands, within the corporate limits of the municipality of South San Francisco, have been subdivided into streets, alleys, blocks and lots, without one square foot being dedicated and set apart for any public purpose, save, except and alone the land set apart and dedicated for streets and alleys.

The recitation of this regrettable fact does not relieve the present predicament.

It is up to the people of this city to help themselves in this emergency. The question the people of this city are up against is a double-barreled proposition.

First, it is to get land enough for the purpose; and second, it is to get land suitable for the purpose.

Allowing for the necessary room for athletic games and accessories, the very lowest estimate will require ten acres. Again, the site for the park and athletic field must necessarily be upon the line of a main thoroughfare or street. These are fundamental of the vital necessities that The Enterprise submits to-day for the serious consideration of the people of this city.

MEN WITH LONG FINGERS PRONE TO BE DESERTERS

Washington.—Men with long, tapering "piano" fingers are apt to desert after short service, while those having stubby digits, denoting stability of character and utter lack of the artistic temperament, usually stand by their oaths and make the best marines, according to finger print experts at headquarters of the United States marine corps.

Although desertions from the corps are light at all times, it has been found that actors, sign writers, and, strange to say, waiters, furnish the largest number of deserters.

Records, including finger prints, of all men enlisted in the marine corps are kept at headquarters for purposes of identification, and there are cases on record where bodies with finger tips intact, have been positively identified through the finger print medium.

ODD DISH FINDS FAVOR WITH UNITED STATES MARINES

Managua (Nicaragua), August 23.—Perhaps broiled lizard will never find its way to the menu cards of fashionable New York restaurants, but the United States marines attached to the American legation here have found, as entremets to the lotus, fried or broiled iguana steaks, served with a pastry sauce made from alligator pears, to be everything claimed by the native epicures.

The iguana, or giant lizard, has been used for food by the natives for many years, and iguana steak finds much favor with them because of its gamey taste. The iguana is herbivorous.

FRATERNAL ORDERS

(By George W. Hagedorn.)
I. O. of R. M.

Perfect happiness, I believe, was never intended by the Deity to be the lot of His creatures in this world, but that He has very much put in our power the nearness of our approaches to it, is what I have steadfastly believed.

Thursday evening at Metropolitan Hall the enjoyment experienced by all who attended Tippecanoe Tribe's "Social Corn Moon Dance" was all that was expected by the members and their friends. Margraff's orchestra rendered a splendid program to perfection. Several selections, produced for the benefit of the tribe, displayed wonderful Indian dances that were thoroughly enjoyed by all. The pine fruit juice booth did a splendid business—nectar fit for the gods. Several visitors from out of town expressed themselves as having the best evening's pleasure enjoyed for a long time and left a request for another invitation.

It cannot be denied that the system of morality in which we as Red Men have been instructed is the very highest and best that the wisdom of man has ever devised.

It is the internal not external qualifications of a man that should recommend him as a candidate for Redmanship.

Good faith is the philosophy of politics, the religion of government.

In taking care of its orphans, the Improved Order of Red Men know that, in enabling an orphan child to be retained at home, opportunities are given for the full development of child life, where is learnt the lesson what life means, and where they are in daily contact with the manifold phases of existence and given an opportunity to grasp the details and the minutiae of the struggles, trials and temptations which normal life brings with it. Under such auspices children are afforded opportunities for development which can not be gained in the best institutions.

The home has always been the unit around which the development crystallized, and the best we can do for a child who has been deprived of natural guardians is to enable it under the least restraint and under the most natural conditions to obtain a foster home. We educate and support indigent orphans and do what we can to make the world better. This is one of the greatest works of charity. Thousands of little children, hundreds now grown to manhood and womanhood, bless the order in their evening prayer for this work. And it is done at very little annual cost to our members, and done well.

So live, so act, that every hour
May die as dies the natural flower.
A self-reviving thing of power.
That every word, and every deed,
May bear within itself the seed
Of future good in future need.

Brotherhood of American Yeomen.

The installation of officers of Homestead Bay City, No. 5527, last Wednesday evening, conducted by District Manager Berry and assisted by Archer J. E. Clark of Salt Lake City, Utah, was a memorable event. As the first officers to conduct the business of this homestead, lots of work will fall upon their shoulders, and with the support of the splendid membership behind them, a double membership will be reached by the first of the year.

The officers are fully capable of transacting any business that may come before them, of which the members may be proud. In years of fraternal work, it was my first experience to see a complete set of officers present and installed. The interest taken by them spells success in big letters.

October in Yeomanry is an annual event for showing the younger generation that they are thought of throughout the big jurisdiction of this great society. Children's day will be celebrated in every homestead in the United States. Everything will be done to bring enjoyment to them, whether in the care of the society or at home with their parents.

Every young person is now a sower of seed on the field of life. The bright days of youth are the seed time. Every thought of your intellect, every emotion of your heart, every word of your tongue, every principle you adopt, every act you perform, is a seed whose good or evil fruit will prove bliss or bane of your after life.

150,000 LETTUCE HEADS WILL HELP TEACH FARMING

A hundred and fifty thousand lettuce heads, of a multitude of different varieties, and ten acres of cabbage and cauliflower will be part of the teaching equipment which the University of California will use for the instruction of the farmers and their wives who gather at the university farm at Davis from October 2d to November 10th for the short course in poultry husbandry, agriculture, horticulture and dairy manufactures. The university expects these practical object lessons to stimulate the rapidly developing industry of truck gardening in the rich valleys of California.

A very extensive hog-feeding experiment and also a sheep-feeding experiment will be brought to a close while the short course is in session, so that farmers in attendance may see with their own eyes the practical results of different ways of planning the feeding of hogs and sheep.

Every Saturday at the Linden Hotel, piano and harp lessons given by Mrs. A. A. Kishon (nee Vandenbos); terms reasonable. Advt.

Rain Hats in Korea.

Korea is a country of strange head-dresses, but perhaps the most curious headgear of all are the immense rain hats worn by the farmers' wives while working in the fields during the rainy season. These extraordinary coverings are often as much as seven feet long and five feet broad and protect the body as effectively as any umbrella could do.

WHAT DALY CITY THINKS

OF OUR NEW FIRE ENGINE

The new South San Francisco chemical fire extinguisher was taken through Daly City Tuesday and was viewed by a large number of our citizens while it was standing in front of Biggio's. The machine cost $6100 and is certainly up-to-date as a fire-fighter where water is not plentiful. Therefore, not essential in Daly City, but of course would be valuable for the reason that a city cannot have too much fire protection.—Daly City Record-Tattler.

WALKER OUT OF RACE.

George S. Walker, state building and loan commissioner, has announced that inasmuch as his opponent at the primary election, Congressman E. A. Hayes, has received both republican and democratic nominations, he will not make an active canvas this fall for election to the house of representatives, as he does not feel justified in so doing with a nomination of the progressive party only.

"If I win in November," said Walker, "it will be a case of the office seeking the man."—San Mateo Times.

OUR MITE

"Me an' some of the boys was out prospectin'. After a week of the cussedest luck we came back aggravated and disgusted with everybody and everything. It was nigh onto midnight when we struck camp, and jest about as chilly as you'd care to have it. Jim Curry, or Big Jim, as we most generally called him, was a standin' outside with his arms folded across his chest, looking lonesomer than I'd ever seen him afore, though Jim was one of the lonesomest kind, always mooning by hisself. If you'd ask him what he was thinking about he'd jest say one word, 'Home.'"

"Wait a minit, boys," says he, taking the pipe out of his mouth. "Don't go in yet—there's something in there."

"He spoke in a skeered kind o' way, and we all gathered round him, wonderin' what had happened."

"Sit down, for I know yer tired, an' I'll tell ye what's up," says Jim in the solemnest tone.

"We dropped on the log alongside the tent and waited, curiously, for him to speak."

"Well, boys," says he, heaving a long sigh, "nigh afore last I was a sittin' jest where you are, feelin' awful blue thinking of the little ones east, when all of a sudden I saw a mite of a thing standing near me. I tell you I was skeered for a minit. Thought sure 'twas the ghost of one of my—"

"He kind of gulped something down afore he could say children."

"I put my hand out, touched the critter, and found 'twas alive. Where did ye come from, sonny? says I, at a venture, not knowing whether 'twas a sonny or a sissy. It ketched my hand and says in a squeaky voice, 'Tome, mamma.' I went with it and it wandered around; 'peared to be looking for something. Purty soon I spied a woman, sittin' on the ground, leaning agin a tree. Well, you might have knocked me over with a straw, I was that astonished. Good evening, ma'am, says I, as polite as if there was a hundred eyes looking at us instead of only the big, shiny moon and a thousand twinklin' stars. She didn't answer so I went a step nearer and saw her face was white as—as I was goin' to say sheet, but it was whiter'n any sheet I've seen lately. Then I picked her up—there warn't no more left to her than to a baby—and brought her into camp, the mite trotten along after me."

"Abe was doubled up on the buff'lo skin, snorin' like old forty. I give him a kick. He jumped up and began rubbin' his eyes."

"Trapped some game, Jim?"

"Get a light and you'll see," says I, laying the limp critter on the rug. "He made a light, and when he caught sight of my game he gave a yell like a wild Injin."

"Holy poker, Jim! whar'd ye find it?" says he.

"Out thare sittin' agin a tree. Bring the whisky, and let's see if its dead."

"We rubbed her hands, soused water in her face, and put raw whisky in her mouth. Abe was on tightenin' her frock, but I said 'no, if she comes to, she'll do it herself; if she's dead—' Well, we thought of our own wimmen folks, an' kind o' covered her up an' waited."

"After a while she gave a sigh, opened her eyes and stared around."

"It's all right, ma'am," says I, "you're with friends."

"Then she put her hand out, an' I knew she was feelin' for the mite. I looked 'round the tent. There the little thing sat, staring with its big eyes, not saying a word. I brought it over and put it where she could touch it, and you'd jist felt sorry to see the look that come into her white face. I got a bit of cold ven'son an' put it in her mouth, but she shook her head."

"All right, ma'am," says I; "if you can't eat I'll give you spoon vittils."

"I got some hard tack, soaked it in whisky, and she swallowed a little. Abe took the mite on his knee and fed it. You jest oughter seen it stow away the ven'son and biscuit. Then he put it 'longside its mother, an' they both fell over asleep."

"Let's bunk over in that corner," whispered Abe.

"Not both of us," says I, pointing to the woman's white face; "it isn't safe."

"So we took turns watching. The mite slept like a tired kitten, but she moaned all night. In the mornin' we made her a cup of tea. Maybe she didn't gulp it down! Then I brought a basin of water and asked her if she'd like to take a wash. She raised her hand, but it fell helpless at her side."

"P'raps I had better do it for you."

"She looked kinder grateful, an' while I bathed her poor thin face, Abe stood in the door snickering. When I finished he took the basin away. After a while the mite came in with its hands and face clean and its hair slick as a coon; then I knew he had been tryin' his hand as nurse, too. During the afternoon the woman brightened up a bit and told us her story."

"It 'pears she an' her husband come from Ohio more'n two years ago, and settled on government land. Their nearest neighbors lived in a cabin some three miles off. About six months ago they got disgusted, picked up their traps and left. Soon after, her husband was taken down with rheumatics, so she had to do all the chores and 'tend her baby and sick husband. Next, their one horse died. The husband worried and grew worse; 'twarn't mending matters, but, poor cuss, I s'pose he couldn't help it. At last the rheumatiz struck his heart and he went off all of a sudden, leaving her and the mite alone, not a living soul within twenty miles of them. For a day or two she was nearly wild with fright and lonesomeness; then she dug a grave and she with the mite buried the dead man. Boys, your hearts 'ud jest ached if you'd seen the skeered look in her face when she was tellin' of it. After that she picked up a few duds and what grub there was in the cabin and started for Cheyenne, but saw the gate of heaven open and concluded to step in. Abe went up the hills to invite you all down to the funeral; he isn't back yet, so I s'pose he missed you."

"Jim looked lonesomer than ever when he stopped talking. His heart was nearly as big as his body, and that was six foot long. He put his hand over his eyes, and I saw something shining on the tip of his nose. It might 'ave been a drop of dew that fell from the trees over our heads, only dewdrops ain't hanging around frosty nights!"

"Come an' have a look at her," says he.

"We bared our heads and followed him into the tent. On the buffalo skin lay the woman, or girl, for she was quite young, and the child near her, sound asleep. Jim had stuffed his coat between them, to draw a line between the livin' and the dead, as he put it."

"We sat down and talked in a sort of whisper about the time when the ones we loved went away from us forever. First thing we knew a streak of light shot up in the east, then a couple of us went out to prepare the grave, while others tidied up the tent. No one thought of breakfast; at least no one had the heart to speak of it."

"Look here, boys!" says Jim, coming over to our new cemetery. "Do any of you know what them preacher fellows say at a buryin'. It's something 'bout 'He that believes in Me shall live even though he be dead!'"

"We shook our heads, and Jim went on—"

"It isn't Christianlike to drop her inter that hole without a word. I vote that we all kneel down and say the Lord's Prayer afore we dump her in."

"The boys agreed to this, and we filed back to the tent. A couple of us lifted the purty little critter, as carefully as a mother 'ud lift a baby, and carried her out. Abe took the mite in his arms, and the rest followed, like a sure enough procession."

"Here, yonker, wake up, and take a last peep at yer ma," says Abe.

Then we knelt down, and I reckon we looked about as sheepish as any half dozen rough fellers ye ever see'd. You can jest bet our hearts war thumpin' again our sides, and if we didn't cry it wasn't because we didn't wanten. At last I sed, 'Jim, you're runnin' this thing, s'pose you begin the prayer.' He did, and we all joined in; some 'peared to forget the words, but we got through after a fashion, then dropped the body into the grave as tenderly as we could. As Jim threw the first shovel full of dirt in he said in a choking way, 'Rest in peace.' Each of us took a hand at it, repeating the same words. There warn't any blubberin' at that funeral; but you bet 'twas awful solemn. It took us a whole week to get straightened up again, and get the kinks out of our hearts."

"The little critter the dead woman left us was a living sermon to us all. P'raps we didn't love her; and p'raps we didn't try not to swear when she was around. We all chipped in and sent Abe to Cheyenne to buy black frocks for her. All claimed a share in her, and nights when she was sleeping like a kitten we'd tell what we'd do when she was big enough to begin larnin'. When we'd go to bunk we'd take turns holding her in our arms so as to keep her warm. Ah! she was the cutest, lovinest little thing you ever see. We never knew her name, so we always called her 'Mite.' When we went up mountains we'd take her along, and she'd play 'round till she got tired, then some one 'ud put her to sleep. Each man had his own pet name for her. She was Abe's sunshine, Jim's blossom and my birdie. I s'pose you'll smile at my tears, but I can't keep them back when I think of her. You see there was a lot of love 'cumulatin', as it was, in our hearts when she dropped into camp, and we poured every bit of it right out onto her."

"The next winter she took cold, no one could tell how it happened, for we were very keeful of her. It was terrible sudden—only lasted three days—then she jest stepped into the open gate after her mother. Well, maybe there wasn't blubberin' at that funeral! If you'd been thar you'd a thought the Queen of England an' her ancestors was dead. We dressed out Mite in a little black frock so her mother 'ud know we'd done the square thing by her. Jim was the hearse, and when we reached the cemetery, each man took her in his arms an' held her till the next had to take her from him almost by force. Last of all, Abe got her. He kissed the dear little face 'bout twenty times, then said, all in a tremble, 'I can't do it, boys; some one else 'ill have to put her in.' 'I'll do it, Abe,' says I, reachin' for her; for 'tween you an' me I was glad to get her in my arms once more. He walked away, sobbin' like a woman."

"We sed the Lord's Prayer same as at her mother's buryin'; then lowered her into the tiny grave with our hands. We covered the innocent little face, so dear to every man of us, with a clean handkerchief; 'twas Abe's best; and Jim turned his head aside when he dropped the earth on her, saying, in a shaky voice: 'Now I lay me down to sleep.' Somehow, Jim could always think of the right kind of prayers. You bet there wasn't no stones in the earth that covered her little body, for every grain of it was passed through a fine sieve before 'twas used for fillin' up. Abe made a cross of wood and carved on it—'Sacred to the Memory of Our Little Mite.'"

And planted it at the head of the grave. Jim made one like it, and jest put the words—

'Mite's Mother'

On it. We made a fence of logs for our cemetery, and used to sit on them at night, smoking our pipes an' talkin' about our baby. But we couldn't stand the lonesomeness after she was gone, so we pulled up stakes and left. Before going each man laid a bunch of evergreens on the graves of Mite and her mother, and I wouldn't like to swear that our eyes were tearless when we left them to their everlasting rest."

Not Selfish.

He—Do you believe in every man for himself?

She—Oh, no! I believe in every man for some woman.

THE MISSION PLAY

(By Sol N. Sheridan.)

Taking the golden glory of Californian days to the millions of Americans who may never hope to come themselves to California, the world-famed Mission Play will leave its home in San Gabriel early in September for a tour of the principal cities of the United States that will last for more than two years.

When the Mission Play, which has been called by Dr. Henry Van Dyke "the greatest American pageant," was written, it was never intended that it should be taken away from that sunny atmosphere in which it was born and has had its being. The Mission Play is to America what the Passion Play of Oberammergau is to Europe. It is the American manifestation of that passion of love and suffering as old as humanity; touching the heart of humanity; lifting up the souls of men to the Power that is over all. It has given to men a series of pictures as broad as all humanity; a single picture in the whole presentation which lingers in the heart after the last curtain has fallen as a blessing from an old man's lips will linger.

But all men cannot come to Calvary, although each one bears the cross. There were and are thousands who may never come. And so the call has come, strong and stronger every year, from those who could not come to San Gabriel—and this demand has become so insistent that the author of the play, John Stephen McGroarty, has yielded to it; and after 961 performances in its own specially constructed playhouse at San Gabriel, the Mission Play is to go out and shed its light and beauty upon the world of America.

The Mission Play will go upon its tour with all the sumptuous settings which have marked its productions at San Gabriel—the productions which have drawn thousands and which have spread the fame of the play around the world. It will carry nearly one hundred people, making it the largest traveling troupe on the road. These people, most of them, grew up around San Gabriel, where the play grew up; and while they are not professional actors, neither are they amateurs. They have grown into the play, as the play has grown a part of their lives. They are Californians, real Californians. Some of them are descendants of the first Spanish families that settled in the province of California. The Indians in the play are California mission Indians, with Indians of many other tribes, but all Indians. Their paint is Indian paint, not grease paint.

The writer of the Mission Play, John Stephen McGroarty, himself the author of the most notable history of California so far given to American letters, has felt the spirit of the time in which the action of the play is laid; and he has made in this work a contribution to the history of America which covers at the same time an appeal to the soul of America.

The Mission Play tells of the founding, and the decay, of the Franciscan missions of California, but while it is true to the lives of the Franciscan fathers, true in its every part to the wonderful work that they did, the appeal of the Mission Play is in no sense sectarian. So great a dramatic writer as William Winter said of it: "While the Mission Play truthfully follows the devotional spirit of the priesthood, it is essentially historic without theological bias or sectarian drift."

That is the spirit of the Mission Play. It is a wonderful pageant of a period in American history which will live as long as the world lives, marking the conquest of a golden wilderness by men devoted without hope of earthly reward to the good of the souls of men. It teaches from history a lesson in unselfish devotion to duty rarely to be learned on the pages of humanity's progress down the centuries. And, teaching this rare lesson, in beautiful symbolic pictures and from the lives of good men who really lived, and, living, suffered, the transcontinental tour of the Mission Play will form perhaps the most notable event in the history of the drama in this country.

It will carry its own beautiful lessons to men and women and children, and it will make of the American stage in the best sense the educational factor, teaching the best things in life, which carries the highest purpose of the stage.

NEW WAY OF PROMOTION FOR NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS

Washington.—A new avenue of promotion for worthy non-commissioned officers who have been barred from commissions because of over-age, lack of education or other deterrent circumstance, opens up in the provision made in the navy appropriation bill for the appointment of forty warrant officers in the United States marine corps.

These warrant officers will be known as marine gunners and quartermaster clerks, and their pay and allowances will range from $1750 to $2500 a year.

Enlisted men who are "able to do things" will get the appointments, and the theoretical element will not enter into their examinations, say marine corps officials at headquarters.

A Great Psychologist on Prohibition

Hugo Munsterberg, the well-known professor of psychology at Harvard, is not a prohibitionist. On the other hand he believes that the prohibition method of dealing with the liquor problem is a mistaken method. Read what he has to say on the folly of prohibition:

"The railroads of the United States injured last year more than one hundred thousand persons and put out seven thousand hopeful lives; does any sane person argue that we ought to abolish railroads? The stock exchange has brought in the last year economic misery to uncounted homes, but even at the height of the panic no one wanted to destroy the market for industrial stock. How much crime and disaster and disease and ruin have come into the lives of American youth through women, and yet who doubts that women are the blessing of the whole national life? To say that certain evils come from a certain source suggests only to fools the hasty annihilation of the source before studying whether greater evils might not result from its destruction, and without asking whether the evils might not be reduced, and the good from the same source remain untouched and untampered with. Even if a hollow tooth aches, the modern dentist does not think of pulling it; that would be the remedy of the clumsy village barber. The evils of drink exist, and to neglect their cure would be criminal; but to rush on to the conclusion that every vineyard ought, therefore, to be devastated, is unworthy of the logic of a self-governing nation."

Can the prohibitionists who are asking you to adopt their fads in California point to one single man of the scholastic attainments of Dr. Munsterberg who approves their cause?

Talks on Thrift

The Waste of Money.

In the daily papers comes the story of the downfall of the widow of a prominent Wall street man, who twice has been presented to British royalty, lived on Fifth avenue, was a social leader and a woman of the four hundred. In the brief six years of her widowhood she has wasted a fortune of over one hundred thousand dollars and now faces the charge of passing a worthless check. She says she has made a "sad mistake," but did the "best she knew how" with her money—put it in ill-advised business ventures, invested in doubtful securities and spent the rest in social aspirations.

Of lesser magnitude, but no less tragic, is the recent case of a German woman with three children, who in the short space of ten weeks has spent (not "invested") the fourteen hundred dollars received from her husband's death in an accident. During that time she has visited the savings bank on an average of every other day, drawing from twenty-five to fifty dollars each time.

Another woman who received a life insurance payment of two thousand dollars wasted her inheritance in two weeks at the races. Another who received a thousand dollars bedecked herself with jewelry and had to go back to the factory in three months. A certain youth received two thousand dollars as his share of his uncle's estate, quit work and lived the high life for a short time, and then went broke, as they all do.

The only redeeming feature of these processes is the fact that the waste of money cures itself, for soon there is no more to waste. The above-mentioned individuals have found it out. It matters not whether the sum be large or small, it seems an endless amount, but a little extravagance every day soon brings the fund to a state of exhaustion.

Life insurance companies have found upon investigation that a large proportion of their policy settlements are frittered away in the course of a few years. The hard work and the sacrifices of the bread winner, in which the beneficiary usually has shared, seem to count for naught when the settlement comes and passes a considerable sum into irresponsible hands.

This is no indictment against womanhood, but as a sex they seem to have the knack of spending easy money fast. While a thrifty woman is the Lord's choicest creation, the thriftless one is His greatest bane. Bank men of experience will corroborate the conclusion that it is unwise to leave money to the wife in such a way as to tempt her to be improvident with it. The fortune first mentioned would have given the wife an income of at least five thousand a year for life, if properly invested, and the smaller amounts would have helped the beneficiaries over many a rainy day. The caution to the men in such matters is to so arrange affairs that the income and not the principal may be used.

The best legacy you can leave your wife is a well-invested estate. If you love her you can prove it best by not giving her absolute control of her legacy, but by saving her from all the pitfalls that are open to the unsophisticated and the unwary. Save her from herself, her friends and the slick promoter who dazzles her with alluring tales of large returns from her investments.

Many a man has spent a lifetime providing for those he must leave behind, and his provision caused their own downfall. It is no reflection upon the woman to make these statements, but they are cruel truths borne out by everyday experience. You do well to consider what might happen to those who survive you if they fall prey to the temptations that beset those mentioned above. The best estate you can leave is the certainty that the future will not find those you love in want through their own folly, made possible by your own shortsightedness. Thrift not only prepares for the future, but safeguards the future, and easy money needs such protection.

WELL-KNOWN
BROKER DEAD

Funeral rites for D. G. Doubleday of Millbrae, who died suddenly Sunday from pneumonia, were held Tuesday afternoon and were followed by cremation. The services were attended by many sorrowing relatives and friends.

Although only 49 years of age at the time of his death, Doubleday had a most active and interesting career. For a time he did newspaper work, and later became a banker and broker. Before the 1906 fire, he had the reputation of being the largest trader on the floor of the San Francisco stock exchange, as well as being the largest in stature. In a few years he handled more than $100,000,000 worth of mining stock, and his business extended to all parts of the world. At that time he maintained tickers in the lobbies of the Palace and St. Francis hotels. He was one of the first brokers to appear on the ground during the Goldfield mining boom, and at the time of his death was interested in several new mining camps.

Doubleday is survived by a widow and three minor children. The San Mateo county development association sent a fitting floral tribute as a last token of respect to this Peninsula booster, who has passed away in the prime of life.

SHORT COURSE STUDENTS
INCREASE FARM LIFE PROFITS

It pays the farmer to go to school, according to the University of California.

While arranging for the short courses in poultry husbandry, agriculture, horticulture and dairy manufactures to be given at the university farm at Davis from October 2d to November 10th, the University of California has received a number of letters from farmers who attended former short courses, in which they give enthusiastic testimony to the profit of their six weeks at the university farm.

"The money I spent on the short course was the means of doubling my salary," said a letter received by the university from Carl Robertson of Santa Anita.

"I learned the trade of cheesemaking in the short course at the university farm," wrote Oliver Ghiggioli from Bird's Landing, "and as my score in the educational contests shows, it has enabled me to hold my own against any experienced cheesemakers in California."

"The short course is worth cold dollars," wrote Sam Nealy of Rialto. "I passed along my notes and my training in hog-raising to my brother and it has made him money, especially in regard to feeding. The training in stock-judging was of great value to me. They can't palm off a cheap cow on me now. The farmers' short course taught me that a farmer to be successful must really use his head."

"The short course in dairying, through its lectures and clinics, gave me information I could not have procured by years of study by myself," wrote W. R. Heinback of Fresno. "The course enabled me to start my own business, and in six months I increased the daily capacity from 100 to 1000 pounds. The short course more than doubled my earning capacity."

"The short course in dairy manufactures did me a world of good," wrote Glenn Wilson of Chowchilla. What he learned there won him a position as manager of a creamery in Chowchilla.

"If I had had the opportunity to learn how to raise poultry the short course gives, instead of having to buy my knowledge by costly experience, I would be richer to-day by thousands of dollars," said one successful commercial poultryman in a talk to some of the university students of poultry husbandry. This year's poultry course is to teach the farmers and their wives who come to the university farm how to incubate, brood and care for fowls. There will not only be lectures, but all these processes will be learned by actually doing the work, and there will be instruction also in allied subjects, such as irrigation, gas engines, farm machinery and field crops.
